

Portland Daily Journal of Commerce

January 12, 1998; page A1

New Ways of Doing Business the Goal of DPR

Several projects brought the company to the Portland area two and a half years ago, including Nike office improvements, the $150 million LSI Logic campus, and a $25 million TriQuint semiconductor manufacturing plant. Jim Kilpatrick who runs DPR's Oregon office talks about its success and innovative approach. "This industry hasn't exactly been in the forefront of new ways of doing business," says Kilpatrick. "We wanted to help lead the industry by using innovative business and construction practices and show that they can work effectively and profitably."